Tired Tourist.

I've seen such sight of wonder, in Colorado's hills, wild canyons deep as thunder and peaks that gave me thrills, that I am weary, very, of things that are sublime, and for the old flat prairie I'm longing all the time. The mountains rise in glory, each with its snowcapped dome; but back in old Empory a fellow feels at home; and when he's done his labors, and earned his 50 cents, he pow-wows with his neighbors, familiar, kindly gents. The mountains, grand and hoary, thoughts high and noble bring; but back in old Empory there is a creaking swing, where I sit in my slippers on pleasant autumn nights and when I'm gazing on peaks that pierce the clouds, on mountain roads amazing, roamed by the on Soden's dam.
